for half an hour,
saying a ready-money nearly doubled his in that time. Then one of his companions began to get restive.

“I say, Mr. O'Mara,” he asked, “isn't it a bit odd that when you deal you're the only one who ever gets an ace?”

A question of that kind would disconcert most people, but O'Mara showed no sign of understanding its obvious meaning.

“Is that so,” he asked. “I had not noticed it.”

“Jimmy always gets rusty if the luck goes against him,” remarked Seyton.

“Very natural,” said O'Mara, with good-natured forbearance. “Nobody likes losing, I don't, I know.”

As Jimmy happened to get a fairly good hand next time O'Mara dealt, he made no remark for a time. But his next was even more startling than his first.

“You low cad!” he exclaimed, “you-'ve got the ace of hearts and the ace of clubs between your knees and the table.”

He dragged the table away, and the cards fell to the ground.
O'Mara raised his hand to dash the pack in his face, but Seyton caught his arm.

“None of that,” he said sternly but quietly. “I think you'd better go, O'Mara. I beg your pardon, you fellows.”

O'Mara, white as death, took up his hat and stick and left the room, the others making way for him. The flush of rage which had followed Jimmy's denunciation of him had passed, and he felt sick and shaken. Seyton's tone of quiet scorn rang in his ears, the apology he had made for intruding upon his friends the society of a detected card-sharp, was bitter to remember.

He had reached the Strand before he remembered that he had left Seyton's rooms not only without the money he had won, which he certainly would not have been allowed to take, but without the bulk of his own money.

For a moment the discovery had stripped him of the icy veneer of affectation which long use had made second nature to him, and he stood still in the street, shaking his fist and sputtering curses until the passers-by paused and stared at him.

He walked on, drunk and blind with rage.

The idea crossed his mind that he might go back to the Temple and claim his money, but even his cynicism quailed at the thought of facing those who had so recently expelled him from their society as a convicted swindler. The figure of Jimmy, who was muscular and obviously had a nasy temper, finally appeared in his mind's eye to put the idea to flight.

He passed under a gas lamp and counted the coins remaining to him.
They amounted in all to a few shillings.

“Was ever such damnable luck!” he groaned. “To be detected by a pack of boobies like that. I can never show my face again. I must get out of this London is played out for me. I'll go home and work for a day or two, make a little money, and go. Gillian and the child must shift for themselves.”

He steadied his shaking nerves with a glass of brandy at a bar near Charing Cross, and doggedly started for home.
It was raining, and before he arrived in Peter street he was wet to the skin.
He let himself in with his latch-key, and mounted the stairs.

The door of his room was ajar, and he heard voices within—his wife, and he deeper tones of a man. He crept up the final flight and listened.

CHAPTER III.

A THIEF IN THE NIGHT.

Gillian, meanwhile, had completed her work, and followed her husband's example of going out to find a patron for it, with less success than he had met.

None of the tradesmen to whom she offered the little packet of cards, painted with pretty, feeble designs, wanted them, or had need of any service she was fitted to perform. She was only one of many hundreds of women, gently born and nurtured, who were tramping the streets of London that day on similar errands, trying to turn to some profit the conventional accomplishments which is part of what is termed their education.

Of all sad spectacles in the world, the penniless lady is the most hopeless.
One meets her on every hand, bravely and silently fighting her hopeless battle, content if she can secure wages a bricklayer would scorn. And every day her numbers increase.

A neighbor as poor as herself, a little seamstress who worked sixteen hours a day for five farthings an hour in the garret overhead, had taken charge of Dora for her during her absence. She had nothing but thanks to give her for her services, nor would the brave little woman have accepted any recompense more solid.

Only those who have lived among the poor can know what they are to each other, how by continual little shiftings of their common burden they make it endurable to their bruised and heavy shoulders.

Gillian sat with her child in her lap beside the window in the fading light of the chill spring evening. There was a threat of rain in the low-lying clouds and in the moist, dark air. At no time in the year is Peter-street a particularly pleasant neighborhood, but it knows its dreariest period in the dreary evenings which precede the coming of summer, at least to the minds of such of its inhabitants as have any memory or imagination of the “brooding peace of the land beyond the city.”

The cracked and dirty pavements, the roadway littered with vegetable offal, the sordid house, from whose windows dangle wretched scraps of household linen, the heavy air, gritty with dust or foul with the mists of the neighboring river and the fumes of the forest of chimneys, all weigh upon the spirit with a laden gloom. Swarms of children, ragged, dirty and unkempt, fill the streets with tumult in a haggard semblance of play. Rusty cuts and dilapidated poultry swear and spit and cluck and scratch about the kennels.

She fell into a dreamy reverie, from which she was awakened by the striking of a clock on the floor below.

“Nine,” she counted. “It is time he was here. Surely, oh surely he will not disappoint me to-day, when he knows how much depends on it.”

The child stirred in her lap with a feverish wail, and she raised it to her breast and rocked it there, singing to quiet it.

“If we could only get away from London,” she thought, “away from the people who take Philip from his work and his home! Oh, darling, hush! You must be patient, dear.
Papa will come directly, and bring the medicine to make my darling well again, and perhaps the money to take us into the country, all among the grass and flowers and fresh air.”

She ran on, as mothers will, talking to the child, as if her words were as comprehensible to its little intelligence as the happy tone in which she forced herself to speak them.

“That's all we want, isn't it, to make us well and strong again? Hush, what's that?”

She paused in her talk to the child with a sudden catch of the breath.

“Philip! Yes, thank God!”

Her face flushed at the sound of a foot upon the stair. It mounted as she listened eagerly, but she fell back in her seat with a sigh of patient disappointment as a knock sounded at the door.

“Come in!” she answered, peering at him through the shadows.

“Yes,” answered a cheery voice. “I was passing on my way home and thought I would run up and see how you were, and the little one.”

Gillian rose and lit a candle.

Her visitor was a man of thirty-five or so, broad shouldered and strongly built, deep in the chest, long in the arms, with a clean-shaven face of healthy palor and crisply curling hair.
He was rather negligently dressed in the uniform of a Church of England curate, but his general style and manner were by no means of the conventional clerical kind, and but for his clothes he might have been anything in the world but a parson.

“Mr. O'Mara's out, I see, he remarked, after shaking hands.

“Yes; he finished the picture this morning, and has gone to take it home.
I am expecting him back every minute.
Pray take a seat Mr. Beam.”

Mr. Beam's quick eyes, travelling round the room in a perfect candid examination, rested on the brandy and the empty soda water bottle.

“Hum!” he said, in a tone too low to reach his companion's ears, and, obeying her invitation, drew the remaining chair to her side and sat down.

“And how is Dora?” he asked, tending above the child as she lay in her mother's lap. “Allow me.”

He took the child delicately in his strong hands, and examined it by the light of the candle, with his finger on the little wrist.

“Hum!” he said again. “The medicine does not seem to have answered as well as I had expected; you are sure you obeyed the directions?”

Gillian's fluttering breath was the only answer to his question.
“The pulse is weaker,” said Beam, as if to himself, but with his eyes fixed on the mother's averted face. “Dry skin, distinctly feverish—Mrs. O'Mara answer me, please. Has the child had the medicine?”

“No,” she answered faintly.

“That,” said the curate, “can mean only one thing—that you have not the money to buy it. Come, come, are we not old friends enough yet to speak to each other plainly? Do you put your pride in the balance with your child's life?”

“With her life!” she said. “Oh Mr.
Beam.”

“The child is seriously ill,” he answered. “She was ill yesterday, and is worse to-day.”

Mrs. O'Mara started at him with a face as white as paper.

“I warn you that Dora's life is in danger. She must have proper treatment, proper food, change of air.
Think! Is there no way of procuring these for her?”

Gillian shook her head, with her hands opening and shutting with a nervous, mechanical gesture. The blow had been so sudden she could not realize it yet.

“The medicine,” said Mr. Beam, “is easily arranged for.”

He turned to the table and wrote on a leaf torn from his note-book.

“Excuse me,” he said, “while I give this to the landlady.”

Gillian, left alone with the child, strained it in her arms, but without looking at it, staring straight before her, with a wide-eyed look of terror.

“Listen to me, Mrs. O'Mara,” said Beam re-entering the room. “I know when you first came to live in this place, that both you and your husband were different in birth and breeding from the people about you. It was impossible to see either of you and not to know it. It was not my business then —it would have been an impertinence to ask questions, to pry into your past, to seek in any way to know more of your history than you choose to tell.
It is different now, and I am resolved to allow no scruple of false delicacy to restrain me from prompting you to plain duty. Have you any relations, any friends, who could help you? I do not know who they are, for the moment at least. But are there any such?”

The Moose Jaw Times.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1891

The following are the names of the delegates from Medicine Hat who will attend the Convention here to-morrow. Messrs. Horner, Armstrong, Cousins, Lovick, Doffin, McCord, and W. Armstrong.

Saturday's Convention.

Mr. Davin in his speech on Saturday in Regina, as reported in the Leader, seems to find fault with the conduct of Mr. E. N. Hopkins in calling a convention here on Saturday first, to nominate a party to be a candidate at the approaching election for the House of Commons. It will be within the recollection of our readers that at the convention during the autumn of 1886, a Liberal Conservative Association for Western Assiniboia was formed, and that Mr. Hopkins was elected its President. The convention at that time was composed of Regina 15; Moose Jaw 10; Medicine Hat 7; Maple Creek 5; Swift Current 3; which were all the Associations that were formed at that time. And they are the only ones that are in existence at the present time, as far as we are aware of. At the close of that Convention there was a motion to adjourn to meet at the call of the President. As soon as it was announced that an election was at hand, Mr. Hopkins lost no time in sending to prominent Conservatives at Regina, Swift Current, Maple Creek and Medicine Hat notice of a Convention to be held at Moose Jaw on Saturday the 14th of February, 1891. Objections of various kinds are taken to the action of Mr. Hopkins in the matter. It is true that the Liberal Conservative Association for Western Assiniboia has hitherto not had any existence but on paper, because no occasion has arisen for it to manifest any activity. Still the occasion having arisen, Mr. Hopkins, as its President, would, we submit, have been remiss in his duty had he lost any time in calling a convention. He has discharged his duty in sending out his circulars calling the Convention, and it will be for the different parts of the Riding to take such action in the matters they see fit. Whether a party Convention is or is not the best way to bring out a candidate is not the question. The Liberal Conservative Association having been formed, and he elected its President, he had only one course to pursue. This he has taken in calling the convention.

CONSERVATIVES CONGREGATE.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC GATHERING.

A large and representative meeting of the Moose Jaw Liberal Conservative Association was held in the Brunswick Hall on Wednesday. The President Mr. J. T. Simpson in the chair. On motion R. L. Alexander was elected Secretary. With a view to organizing, as some time had elapsed since meeting, some items of the Conservative Association were read, and some fifty gentlemen signed the roll. The meeting being favorable to electing officers by open vote. The following were elected unanimously: President, T. B. Baker; Vice-President, H. Battell; Secretary, R. L. Alexander; Treasurer, C. A. Gass; District Vice-Presidents, H. Dorrell, E. Smith, W. C. Saunders, H. Might and W. Hannah. Mr. Baker on taking the chair expressed a hope that all Conservatives would take a lively and abiding interest in the Society. A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring President who suitably responded. Communications were then read from E. N. Hopkins re District Convention, and the Regina Association on the same matter. Considerable discussion took place as to the best way of electing delegates so as to represent the district justly, but on motion of J. G. Gordon, seconded by M. G. Annable, it was unanimously carried, that we elect our ten delegates by one ballot for the whole, and the necessitated the ballots be passed a second time, when the following gentlemen were declared elected in the following order: Messrs. Hopkins, Dorrell, Baker, Smith, Saunders, Gordon, Annable, Gass, Moore and Neeland. On motion of Mr. Morrison that the delegation hold a meeting and support the majority of such a meeting in nominating a candidate for the Dominion House was carried—19 to 15. Moved by H. Dorrell, seconded by G. M. Annable, that the delegate polling the highest vote be chairman to delegation and have a casting vote in case of a deadlock—carried. E. N. Hopkins spoke on the advantages of good organization. W. C. Saunders followed, detailing a system and pointing out that indifferent organization was worse than none. J. G. Gordon favored, copying the Regina Association By-laws. It was finally moved by W. C. Saunders, seconded by T. Wilson, that E. N. Hopkins, H. Dorrell, C. A. Gass, and mover be a committee to draw up regulations for the better representation of the District in the Association. It was arranged that the principal officers should meet visiting delegates, and arrange for their accommodation at the Society's expense. The meeting then adjourned to meet at the President's call through the Times.

AN IMPROMPTU MEETING.

Mr. Davin had been invited to attend the farmers meeting held in Campbell's hall, at which memorials on Education and Land Questions were prepared, but his train (the express) did not arrive until after five o'clock, the meeting having broken up before he arrived. However, word was passed around that a meeting would be held at 7 o'clock, and that Mr. Davin would have a friendly talk with his friends. The hall was about three quarters full. Mr. T. B. Baker was elected to the chair and he said Mr. Davin was here now to confer with them, and would answer any questions. Mr. Davin who was well received, addressed the meeting for about an hour. He read a letter from the Clerk of Works, as follows:—

Regina, Feb. 9th 1891.

N. F. Davin, Esq., M. P.
SIR:—In reply to yours, enquiring about Court House and Lock-up for Police at Moose Jaw, I have the honor to inform you that I expect the plan from Ottawa during the month of January just passed, I saw the plan of the proposed Court House and Police quarters for Moose Jaw, in the office of the chief draughtsman Mr. Watts, and in my opinion the arrangements both for Police, consisting of quarters for non-commissioned officers, and constables, with a kitchen in rear of same, three cells suitable for locking up prisoners, the upper story with a separate entrance at one end for Court room, room for Judge, and Barristers, with all the necessary railings, Judges bench, dock for Prisoners, Jury, and Sheriffs boxes etc will make it a most complete building of the kind, the whole will be enclosed with a proper fence taking in the reserve set aside for the purpose. As soon as the plan arrives you can depend upon my making every effort to have the work done to the satisfaction of all concerned, and with the least possible delay. I have the honor to be, Sir, Yours truly,

HENRY I. PETERS,
Donk. Clerk of Works.

The following letter was also read from John Carling, Minister of Agriculture:

Ottawa, Feb. 5th, 1891.

Dear Mr. Davin.

I am in receipt of your letter of the 31st, in which you strongly urge that the agricultural society at Moose Jaw be granted a sum of money to enable them to erect fences and permanent structures on their fair ground. I need not say to you that it would afford me very great pleasure could I meet the wishes of the Society, but there are no funds at my disposal from which I could make such a grant. Now that the House has dissolved and we are in the thick of the fray once more, nothing I am afraid can be done at the present time. However, I shall bear in mind the request you have made on behalf of the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society and the matter shall be considered later on. Believe me, Yours Truly,

JOHN CARLING.

Mr. Davin said the truest way of all of electing a member was to have him come straight from the people. (Cheers.) His remarks at times were humorous and he sat down applauded. Mr. E. Green—"What about the Temperance question?"

Mr. Davin said he would support a clause in the North West Territories Act to leave it to the people to say whether they would have prohibition or not.

Mr. Rutherford, farmer, said Mr. Davin spoke about leaving it to the people to make laws, but he found he could only get three pieces of scented soap here for what he could get ten pieces for in Winnipeg. (Laughter.) Then take black lead (Laughter) that was a serious matter, and he found when he went to the Drug Store he had to pay sixty cents for a bottle of Mother Seigle's Syrup which he could get for a shilling in Scotland (Laughter) "How is a man to live?" (hear hear.)

Mr. Davin said so far as was in his power he would direct his attention to the important matters of toilet soap, black lead and Mother Seigle's Syrup. A revision of the tariff was a subject he approved of, because they remembered in 1883 he had advocated a special tariff for the North West so as to let lumber and other things free. Mr. Watson moved and Mr. McVannell seconded a vote of thanks to Mr. Davin for having come up to visit them, and the mover regretted he had not been in time for the meeting in the day time. This was carried unanimously. A unanimous vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.

NO SHADOW OF DOUBT.—No sane person doubts that what we say of B. B. B. is true. The evidence of its power and popularity is too overwhelming to confute, besides it is all home testimony making it certain that B. B. B. will cure dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, scrofula and all blood diseases.

FARMERS' MEETING.

A Large Number of the Farmers Meet to Sanction Memorials, Etc.

A mass meeting of the Farmers of the Moose Jaw district, was held in Campbell's Hall, on Tuesday, Feb. 10th, for the purpose of considering and sanctioning the Memorials drawn up by Mr. Wm. Watson. Mr. H. Dorrell was called to the chair. After explaining the object of the meeting he called on Mr. Watson to read the draft of his memorials. After a few preliminary remarks he took up and read the draft memorial in reference to School Grants to the North West. After reading the draft of memorial Mr. J. H. Ross, M. L. A., then addressed the meeting in regard thereto in which he spoke in a favorable manner. Mr. Rathwell also spoke upon it in a favorable manner. Mr. F. W. Green and Mr. R. L. Alexander also spoke as an experienced teacher, and threw out some good ideas. Capt. Smith made a few remarks. Rev. Dr. McLean, member of the Board of Education, was called upon to address the audience and was greeted with cheers. After a few remarks he dwelt upon the necessity of having a training or normal school for the purpose of fitting teachers for their work. He also referred to a grant of land asked from the Dominion Government for the purpose of forming a university for the District of Assiniboia. He then took up the teacher's salary question and said that their salaries were too low and various other questions in reference to school matters, when he resumed his seat. Mr. Watson then replied to the remarks and suggestions made by previous speakers. Moved by R. L. Alexander, seconded by S. K. Rathwell, that the memorials as now read be received and adopted—carried. Moved by J. G. Beesly, seconded by E. W. Green, that 200 copies of the school memorial be printed, and a copy be sent to each School district in the North West Territories. Mr. Watson thereupon took up the draft of memorial re Land Laws. Moved F. W. Green, seconded by J. W. McIntosh, that the memorial be received—carried. Moved by F. W. Green, seconded by Capt. Smith this meeting adjourn to meet on Friday, Feb. 13th—carried.

Cough-Cures

Are abundant; but the one best known for its extraordinary anodyne and expectorant qualities is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For nearly half a century this preparation has been in greater demand than any other remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis, and pulmonary complaints in general.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

It is said, and soon began to improve. My lungs healed, the cough ceased, and I became stouter and healthier than I have been before. I would suggest that the name of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral be changed to Elixir of Life, for it certainly saved my life. J. J. O'Brien, Sault Ste. Marie, Quebec. "A few years ago I took a very bad cold which settled on my lungs. I had severe attacks, a rattling cough, and great distress. My doctor's medicine did me no good. I tried many remedies, but received no benefit. I was advised to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, as a last resort, did so. From the first dose I obtained relief, and, after using a bottle of it, was completely restored to health."—F. Adams, New Orleans, N. Y.
